Afoot and Alone; A Walk from Sea to Sea By the Southern Route, Adventures and Observations in Southern California, New Mexico, Arizona, Texas, Etc (Classic Reprint) Stephen Powers

Sea to Sea, the story of which is here narrated, was undertaken, partly, from a love of wild adventure ;partly, from a wish to make personal and ocular study of the most diverse races of the Republic. An earnest love of Nature, even in her grimmest and sullenest moods, made me look forward with delight to the deserts of the Southern route; and my anticipations were realized. Tramping month after month across the great empire of Texas; then wandering free and glad beneath the skies of Arizona and New Mexico ;beholding now and then the flag of the Republic, flaunting in its wide authority over those lonesome and hungry wastes of the Middle Continent this is a pleasure, to be fully enjoyed only by the pedestrian. These were the happiest days of my life, and there comes to me sometimes an insatiable longing to roam again, in the large liberty and lawlessness of the prairies, and to grapple once more with the savage deserts. The book makes no pretention to learning in ethnology or geology, but seeks simply to give some pictures of men and places, with a narrative of the incidents attending the journey. S. P.
